Taking the form of a visual diary, Exchange Diary is a collection of short films recorded and exchanged by two artists over a year, using a unique way in which each artist filmed a short video and sent it to their collaborator who then added their own narration based on their impressions of the visual images. At the same time, inter-personal relationships can enable actors to navigate complex policy-making environments and compensate for geographic distance. City and state governments, for example, might lobby in Washington to pursue their goals and gain benefits. Such things are purposely not a part of education.
