two of the leading contemporary deliberative-democratic theorists describe it, deliberative democracy is a form of government in which free and equal citizens and their representatives justify decisions in a process in which they give one another reasons that are mutually acceptable and generally accessible, with the aim of reaching conclusions that are binding in the present on all citizens but open to challenge in the future. In addition, the normal human reactions of staff to parents of pediatric patients who become angry or hostile may make it more difficult for those parents to have their concerns addressed.
