How to Get a Job Interview Tomorrow

This essay pursues three goals: firstly, to argue that an alliance between literary theory and literary history could be an important force in the current attempts at opening the latter to cultural history as well as to contextualizing approaches to the writing of literary history; secondly, to provide both an overview and a critical discussion of the main problems and kinds of historical contextualism, attempting to systematize some of the most important issues and approaches; and, thirdly, to propose some criteria which any attempt to contextualize literary history should meet.
